Meetings

In Spring 2021, Black students, allies, and I met with Pennsylvania's State System of Higher Education (PASSHE) Chancellor and Vice Chancellor, along with the presidents of the 14 universities, to address the six demands. Brandon Teel and Zuri Redmond, student leaders at East Stroudsburg University, led two virtual town halls on Zoom.

Sen. Haywood, Black Pa. college students meet to discuss collegiate racial discrimination, harassment

Chantale Beletant | TRIBUNE CORRESPONDENT Feb 8, 2021 Updated Feb 15, 2021

State Sen. Art Haywood and African-American Pennsylvania college students are scheduled to meet with Pennsylvania's State System of Higher Education (PASSHE) presidents to discuss racial discrimination and harassment on college campuses.

The virtual campus setting includes Shippensburg University, Indiana University of Pennsylvania, East Stroudsburg University and Bloomsburg University.

"African-American students have six demands, and we demand action," Haywood said. "It's important to have this conversation now because conditions of racial harassment, racial slurs and isolation continue on some of the campuses. Each week, I receive new information on incidents of stereotyping, harassment, white supremacist symbols and racist Zoom bombings on college campuses," added Haywood.

PASSHE Board of Governors Meeting

In April, the PASSHE Board of Governors adopted an agenda of change to fully include underrepresented students. The agenda includes new codes of conduct to address racial harassment, improved methods to recruit and retain faculty of color, and bias response teams on campuses.

Brandon Teel virtually expresses his gratitude for funding via Zoom in Kutztown, PA in July.

Funding Approval

We secured $9 million to Fix the Six in the next three years.

I will continue working with the Coalition to End Campus Racism to make university campuses inclusive, safe, and supportive for all students. Ending campus racism will help future college students in my district and across the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.
